Mommy, What Do Angels Look Like?

Written and illustrated by Amy Sieberer

Portrait artist and poet, former teacher and Super Autism Mom, Amy Sieberer, has released her debut, self-published children's book that asks, "What do angels look like?"

A little boy named Jason is playing in the park and is curious. Why are people wearing angel wings? He discovers that the individuals who devote their lives to helping children with special needs are true guardian angels.

"My son, Jason, is the inspiration behind my writing and my art. Jay is Autistic and has mental health issues, but he also has an amazing sense of humor and sees the beauty and joy in the world and in life. I wrote this book for Jay and all of the other angels just like him."

Amy Sieberer has been writing poetry and illustrating life for the past 40 years. Her dream has been to write and illustrate children's books. Now, that dream has come true.

Amy lives in the Philadelphia suburbs with her endlessly patient and supportive husband. Her two children are on the Autism Spectrum and their life experiences are the basis behind Amy's creative expressions. Using her former teaching experience, creativity, and involvement in the special needs community, Amy's mission is to show the world how to "find the funny" in life's often unfunny moments.
